San Antonio Resort Village of Roxas City still wears the cosmopolitan trappings of its past Hispanic colonization; and reveals penetrating insights into the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception as a re-decorated Basilica of Santa Maria built during the Spanish colonization of Roxas City, Capiz. Geographically divided into a newer, lower-scale eastern half and an older, more traditional western half, bisected by a slow-moving Panay river, San Antonio Resort Village of Roxas City is a quiet and really peaceful exclusive-village. Its "Peace and Order Rating" is nearly 98 percent and its crime index is almost negligible as of the most recent police-records. Every kindred there, it is assumed, is there because of something -- some romance, some secret in the past to heal from, some flourishing enterprise that blossomed well in Roxas.

Like much of the sea palm and coconut-dotted coast within a few minutes from the only airport in Roxas, San Antonio started out as an obscure village where the only commuting involved the local fisherfolk sailing to and fro. Its popularity has grown exponentially as Capizeño high society has turned it and the surrounding areas into the South East's and Western Visayas' answer to the del Rio's.

If you want to lie on the beach but feel like a change of scenery, take a boat to Mantalinga & Olotayan Islands -- it has one of the prettiest sandy beaches in Panay Island. Stroll along miles of beautiful beaches and you may see a local fisherman casting a hand-line wrapped around a Coke bottle, a diver looking for oysters, or a flock of sea birds lazily gliding above the waves. Where else would you find pristine sand, local culture, and picture-perfect sunsets?
